PUBLISHER'S PREFACE

The value of the present work, even if imperfect, needs no explanation to librarians, to journalists, or indeed to any persons who have occasion to look up portraits of celebrities. To such, a list like this must seem an indispensable tool; and the present one appears to be the first of its kind considerable in scope.

As a rule the publications issued by the Library of Congress represent either reports of its administration activities, or, if bibliographic, compilations by members of its own staff. In some exceptional cases the Library has undertaken the publication and distribution of compilations which represent the work of other institutions or individual experts. It has done this on the ground that the compilation would prove a useful contribution to knowledge, but something more, to wit: a useful implement in the administration of libraries; and one therefore to whose ready dissemination it might with propriety lend its aid.

The A. L. A. Catalog was one such exception; this Portrait Index is another. In the case of the former the Library was a contributor to the text itself (not, however, in the selection of titles): in the latter it has not been even this, the entire work having been done outside of its walls. The publication is the result of cooperating labor, the matter being contributed by several institutions, supplemented, digested and edited under the direction and at the expense of the Publishing Board of the American Library Association; and published and distributed by the government authorities. The rôle of the Library is thus merely that of publisher. It does not assume the responsibility, and it can not assume the credit of either authorship or editorship.

There was a large free distribution of the A. L. A. Catalog: a copy being sent without charge to every American library requesting it. There will be no free distribution of the Portrait Index, the entire edition being placed on sale with the Superintendent of Documents. The price (three dollars) will however be nominal as compared with the charge for similar publications in ordinary trade, or the necessary price for this one if it had been issued directly by the Publishing Board of the Library Association. It need not prevent the acquisition of the work by any institution or office requiring it, and it will tend to prevent the waste of copies so common in the case of government publications distributed absolutely gratis.

PREFACE

A few words in regard to the history, scope, purpose, and arrangement of this Index of Portraits are necessary, in order that the inquirer may use it easily, may understand its limitations, and may not be disappointed by consulting it for facts which it does not pretend to contain.

History. The collection of material was begun by the Publishing Board of the American Library Association in 1897, but the project had already been suggested at the meeting of the Association in 1888, and was at that time referred to Mr R. R. Bowker to be reported on. Mr Bowker presented a tentative report at the St Louis meeting in 1889 (Library Journal, 14:174) in which he called attention to work already done—the separate brief indexes to certain magazines and collections published by the Index Society of Great Britain, the indexes existing in the Harper editorial rooms and in the offices of other publishers, the collection of material by Mr Bunford Samuel of the Philadelphia Library Company, and the smaller but more detailed catalog in the Boston Athenæum. In the discussion which followed the reading of the report the utility of such an index was conceded by all, but it seemed at the time too large an undertaking to be practicable.

In 1896, however, the Publishing Board announced its intention of proceeding immediately with the compilation of an index of portraits, using as a foundation the references collected by Mr Samuel (about 40,000) and those available in the Boston Athenæum, perhaps 10,000 more. In the Library Journal of May, 1897, a preliminary list of books and periodicals to be indexed was printed, the scope and character of the proposed index was outlined, and the cooperation of librarians was invited. The response to the invitation was immediate, and came from all parts of the country. The indexers were provided with special cards properly ruled, so that the details to be recorded might be given on a uniform plan and in such shape that the cards might eventually be sent directly to the printer. In the course of the year it was found to be impracticable to use any portion of Mr Samuel's material, and the Board reluctantly gave up the plan of incorporating his references with those supplied by its other collaborators.*

Within a year 13,000 cards were in hand; in 1899 the number had increased to 30,000, and editorial work on the collection began. Cards steadily accumulated, and still many desirable works were unindexed. A list of some of these unindexed works was printed in the Library Journal, March, 1903, and led to new offers of cooperation. In April and July, 1904, the Bulletin of Bibliography printed a list of the works already indexed, numbering about 1,090 titles, and further suggestions were asked for. In the meantime the indexing of many current periodicals was kept up to date by collaborators or in the office of the Publishing Board.

* A selected portion of Mr Samuel's index was published in the Pennsylvania magazine, 1901, vol. 25, p. 47–70, 228–247, 384–399.

In November, 1904, the Board hoped to be ready to print very soon and were making preparations therefor, when they received an offer from the Librarian of Congress to issue the work as a publication of the Library of Congress. This offer the Board was glad to accept for two reasons: (1) It was thus relieved of further financial responsibility, and could use its resources to support other undertakings which it was eager to carry out; and (2) publication by the Library of Congress seemed to assure a wider distribution of the Index, and a sale at a smaller price than the Board would have been able to set upon it. It was expected that printing would begin in the spring of 1905, but it was not until early in April, 1906, that the cards were actually sent to the printer. Before the end of June the whole was in type.

It is evident from an inspection of the volume that work of this kind, though it may be based upon the contributions of widely scattered collaborators, can only be brought to completion by long-continued labor on the part of a single brain that takes account of endless detail. An immense mass of separate entries has to be alphabetized, digested, and compared, and finally to be worked over into a reasonably consistent whole. This work of investigation and collation has been done by Mr Charles W. Plympton, who for seven years has been almost continuously employed upon it. Under the direction of the editors and with occasional help from other persons temporarily employed he has labored over these 115,000 cards with an industry, a patience, and a freshness of interest beyond all praise. Several hundred volumes he has indexed himself, and for the solution of thousands of knotty questions he has scrupulously collected the necessary facts.

To Miss Browne, the secretary of the Publishing Board, more than to any other one person, the Index owes such completeness as it possesses. She has had immediate charge of the details of the work from the beginning, and has been obliged to give a large share of her time to it. The correspondence with collaborators in the earlier years, the execution of the plans for the development of the work, and the supervision of its daily progress in the later years have been entirely in her hands. She has contributed no small share of the indexing and has herself collated and revised many of the more difficult groups of cards.

My own share has been a less intimate and continuous one, but has extended to the discussion of every detail of form and arrangement, has involved the investigation of many points for which there seemed to be no established precedent, but in regard to which someone is required to make a decision, and has included a careful inspection of the proofs, and the settling of many difficult points which came clearly before us only when the Index took printed form.

Scope. A list of works indexed follows this preface. It includes about 1,181 titles or some 6,216 volumes. In addition to the works listed, many others containing but two, three, or four portraits each have been indexed as they have come to hand, but it has not been thought worth while to swell the List by including volumes of this kind Pains have, however, been taken in these cases to make the title as given in the reference sufficiently explicit so as to leave no doubt in regard to the identity of the book. In other cases a greater degree of abbreviation has been permitted, since the full title could be referred to in this List, but abbreviation has not been carried so far, it is hoped, as to make titles unrecognizable by those fairly familiar with works of this kind.

election of books to be indexed is easily open to criticism. In judging points should be borne in mind. In the first place, the Index is intended such material as will make it useful both in small libraries and in large and in publishing houses and newspaper offices as well. To be of use in raries it must include many popular books and periodicals and well-known ns such as are commonly found in the smaller libraries; and to be useful in raries it must give a clue also to the portraits contained in many rare, early, nsive works which are found only in such libraries. This accounts for the riety in the character of the books included. In the second place, it must be ered that the selection is in part an accidental one, being confined to the hich voluntary collaborators offered to index for us, and (in addition to these) which were accessible to our one paid assistant in the libraries of Boston nbridge. If the work had been done by indexers subject to our direction, d have been sent from city to city and from one library to another, it would n possible to draw up a more nearly comprehensive and evenly balanced list.

eneral, the principal has been followed of indexing all the portraits in every dexed. Occasional exceptions to this rule will be found noted in the list. lt is that many persons of minor importance are included, some whose forenames t be discovered, and some whose portraits have been reproduced because of in the artist rather than in the subject. Selection, however, would have been lt task—an impossible one on any uniform basis under the conditions of col- n employed, and it is a clear advantage to the inquirer to know that the so far as it has been covered, has been covered completely.

Index does not include portraits of an author prefixed to editions of his works when the volumes have been indexed for the other portraits they contain. rtraits, it was thought, could usually be found in libraries from the ordinary descriptions of the books.

eneral, genealogical works and local histories have not been indexed. Some ns in favor of certain notable books have been made, but the works of this so numerous, and so many of the portraits included in them are of little ersons, that it was clearly best to omit them. Certain other books contain ge numbers of portraits all of a well-defined and limited class. To include uld have greatly increased the bulk of the Index, and to omit them does not liminish its value. Such are Moses King's "Notable New Yorkers, 1896–99," 2,337 portraits, and Ehrlich's "Celebrated pianists of the past and containing 114 portraits.

y, the Index does not include any references to original portraits as such, to s separately published, or to collections of engravings brought together e collectors. It confines itself to the portraits in books and periodicals and hed collections.

exact statement can be made of the number of portraits indexed or the of persons represented. The number of portraits can not be less than and the number of persons may be estimated at between thirty-five and e thousand. The indexing of current periodicals is in most cases brou hrough 1904 but not further.

Purpose. The Index makes no attempt to estimate or compare th portraits, to pronounce upon their authenticity, or to present any further tion in regard to them than is plainly given in the book in which they are re Such information as the book in the hands of the indexer yielded in r original artist, engraver, method of reproduction, ownership of the original given, and is expressed almost always in the same form as was used in th The reader will accordingly notice apparent inconsistencies in the descriptio same original and differences in the spelling of the names of the artists. The of difference he is asked to accept as probably due to the books from which a are drawn, and he will not ascribe them too hastily to the carelessness of positor or to the stupidity of the indexer or of the editor.

Critical accounts of the portraits of historical personages and of the reproductions of those portraits are greatly to be desired, but form no pa object of this book. Such critical accounts, when known to the editors, u tioned in notes, but in this respect our work is doubtless far from comple main object has been to enable librarians, authors, students, publishers, and turn directly to portraits which would otherwise be found with difficulty n elude their search altogether.

Arrangement. The editors have been obliged to make a careful n many intricate questions of alphabetizing, forms of name, entry, etc. Pr library catalog contains so large a number of troublesome subjects, of n noble personages, and of elusive ladies both married and single. The edit had to depart in several instances from the rules ordinarily followed in c and it will be well to mention briefly a few of the principal points.

Sovereigns are entered under forenames, in the vernacular form i English, French, German, Italian, or Spanish; in the English form in o Under each name the individuals are divided into groups by countries (the in alphabetical order). Under each country the sequence is chronological, come first, and are followed by princes of the same name, unless these known by a title, in which case the entry is under the title instead of forename. In arranging on this system second names are not taken into Marie Antoinette follows Marie Leczynska because her dates are later. slight variations in spelling are not regarded; the Maries and the Marias, t and the Henris, are all brought together and classified by country, irres spelling.

The nobility are usually entered under titles, not under family nam general reference from the surname is always made to the title or title by members of the family. Exception to this rule is made in the case of mo French titles of the Empire, the bearers of which are more commonly know their family names, and are so entered in this Index as well as in most b reference.

The distinction between rulers and nobles, while theoretically simple, difficult to carry out on practical lines. For the purposes of this Index som remembered and applied rule has to be adopted. Rulers bearing the title Emperor are accordingly entered under their personal names; but others, call duke (granduca, grossherzog), elector (kurfürst), prince (prinz or fürst), count (graf), etc., are entered under the title—i. e. the place with which they are connected. This brings all the German princes, except the royal families of Prussia, Bavaria, Saxony, and Würtemberg, under place names though many of them are or have been rulers in the strict sense of the term rather than nobles. The rulers of the Italian cities, on the other hand, the members of the Medici, Gonzaga, Sforza, Visconti, and other families, will be found under the family surname. The rulers of many oriental nations and places (e. g. Siam and Madagascar) are entered under the name of the place, for the practical reason that oriental personal names are unfamiliar to Western ears and are with difficulty remembered and identified. The archdukes of Austria and Russia are necessarily entered under their personal names, having no family name and no titular designation that can be used as an entry word.

As in the case of forenames, so also in the case of titles, the vernacular form is used in the more familiar languages—Sachsen, not Saxony; Toscana, not Tuscany. Under each title the succession of persons is chronological, not alphabetical. This is particularly appropriate in the case of the English nobility, where a consecutive numbering is commonly adopted, and where the title is borne by only one member of a family at a time; but it works almost equally well in other cases—in the German families, where every member, old and young, has equal right to a title, and among the French Bourbons, where the children have no common claim on the father's title, but each son takes a different title, while the daughters, if they have not won a title by marrying, can only be entered under the family name. In all these cases the successive heads of the family with their respective wives come first, and are followed by the younger members, likewise in chronological order. Under Hessen, for example, are the successive electors and grand dukes, and following them the younger members of the family, who bear the title of prinz.

When the same name is used both as forename, title, and surname, those who bear it as a forename come first, then those who use it as a title, and finally those whose surname it is, the last being arranged in the alphabetical order of their forenames. Persons of the same name are placed as near as may be in chronological order. Artists are entered under their more commonly used appellations—Titian, Tintoretto, Rembrandt, etc.

Women are entered sometimes under their maiden names, sometimes under their married names, and in the latter case they may appear in the alphabetical sequence by their husbands' forenames or by their own forenames. The editors have tried to follow the commoner usage in each case and have been guided, but not controlled, by the form used below the pictures. References from one form to another have been freely made, and the editors hope that ladies will usually be found under the form that seems most familiar. In the case of English baronets and knights and their wives, where it is desired to keep the wife next to her husband in the alphabetical sequence, we have taken the liberty of inserting the husband's name in brackets. For instance, the wife of Sir Thomas Dyke Acland is Lady Acland, not Lady Thomas Dyke Acland, but in order to keep her next her husband we are compelled to print Acland, Lady [Thomas Dyke].

Dates of birth and death, or a descriptive phrase, have been added when it was convenient to do so, but in many cases the editors have not been able to recur to the original work indexed, and have been unable to add to what the original indexer may have given. No extended investigation of the accuracy of dates or other biographical data has been made. One good authority has been accepted, and differences of opinion have not been much regarded. The Index is not a biographical dictionary and should not be expected to take the place of one.

One unavoidable source of apparent error in the page references should be mentioned. It is found that in many cases copies of the same work differ as to the pages opposite which portraits are inserted. This is especially true of many of the older periodicals and of some of the collections. It may often happen, therefore, that a page reference, when followed up, will be found incorrect with respect to the copy in hand, although it may have been made correctly from the copy originally indexed.

A note in regard to the abbreviations used will be found on page lxxv.

The editors desire to record their grateful appreciation of the work done by collaborating indexers in all parts of the country, an assistance without which the Index now published could not have been undertaken. They would also express their thanks to the librarian and trustees of the Boston Athenæum for their permission to incorporate in this work that library's careful index to portraits begun long ago, for access to volumes needed for further indexing, and for the constant use of reference books indispensable for the necessary work of collation and investigation. They are also glad to acknowledge their indebtedness to the staff of the Library of Congress (especially Mr E. L. Burchard, in charge of publications, and Mr H. H. B. Meyer, his successor) for the helpful interest shown in the progress of the work, and the great pains taken to give it satisfactory form.
